Four UK based infrastructure veterans have joined forces to launch a new energy, infrastructure and sustainable finance training company.

The founders of CCC Training Limited – Audrey Caulliez-Louis, Ian Cogswell, Steve Mills and Calvin Walker – are all well known in the international project finance market.

Caulliez-Louis is the director of boutique consultancy ACL Impact, having previously worked for banking bigwigs such as MUFG, Mizuho and Standard Chartered.

Cogswell recently joined Portland Advisers having earlier this year (2020) exited ICBC London where he acted as head of project finance.

Mills has been active in the project finance field and has built a reputation as the industry's leading project finance trainer over the past 12 years.

Finally, Walker heads up his own consultancy – Calvin Walker Projects \(CWP\) – providing specialist legal advice on infrastructure and energy transactions.

CCC Training offers both public and in-house courses which may be delivered as live interactive webinars or in a traditional classroom format.

The courses are tailor-made based on clients' specific requirements. The live training is complemented by an eLearning programme that will be accessible online and delivered on a modular, blended basis, combining videos, study texts, case studies and tutor access via an online forum.

Commenting on the launch, the co-founders said: "We believe that our unique combination of recent transactional expertise and senior training skills will enable us to deliver market-leading training in the new digitally led environment."
